Cadetship program a leg-up for Indigenous students.

AFTER BLITZING HIS YEAR 12 EXAMS, JAKE DUKE HAS JUST BECOME AN INDIGENOUS JOURNALISM CADET WITH THE GOLD COAST TITANS, THANKS IN PART TO THE INDIGENOUS CADETSHIP SUPPORT PROGRAM. WE SPOKE TO THE BUDDING YOUNG JOURNALIST TO FIND OUT MORE ABOUT THE PROGRAM.

"I HAVE REALISED THAT HARD WORK, COMMITMENT AND PERSISTENCE ARE THE KEYS TO SUCCESS"

What did you do before starting the Indigenous Cadetship Support program?

Jake: I was completing my Year 12 studies and was School Vice-Captain at Palm Beach Currumbin State High School on the Gold Coast. I was enrolled in the Academic Excellence program and working extremely hard to achieve the highest grades possible. As a result of this hard work and commitment I was able to attain an Overall Position (OP) of 2 [which is equivalent to 97 under the Australian Tertiary Admission Rank] and received access to my chosen course of a Bachelor of Journalism at the Queensland University of Technology.

How is the Indigenous Cadetship Support program helping you?

This program has developed me personally in a number of ways. First, it's allowed me to work with and meet people who have been inspirational for me from a young age, for example, Evonne Goolagong Cawley, Preston Campbell, Darren Lockyer and Wayne Bennett. It has also permitted me the chance to help the plight of Indigenous people and better understand the struggles that they still face in today's society.

In addition, the professional advantages this program has extended to me have been astronomical. I have been able to work on projects usually reserved for distinguished professionals, meet people who have succeeded in the industry of journalism and, as a result, developed confidence and skills beyond my years.

What are your plans for the future?

My immediate plan is to complete my three-year journalism degree. However, after achieving this I hope to find an employment opportunity that will provide me with exciting experiences and further my journalistic knowledge.

What advice would you give to other young people?

My advice for people thinking about their future is to set goals and work as hard as possible to achieve them. Don't concern yourself too much with the big picture but attempt to complete smaller objectives and better yourself, and as a result, opportunities will arise. I have realised that hard work, commitment and persistence are the keys to success.

What would you say to people thinking about doing a cadetship?

I couldn't recommend it more highly. This cadetship has presented me with countless opportunities that I never would have dreamed were possible at the age of 17. It is one of the best things I have undertaken and I have no doubt that it will continue to deliver over the next three years.

What is Indigenous Cadetship Support?

Indigenous Cadetship Support (ICS) is aimed at improving the job prospects of Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander students. It links full-time students undertaking a diploma, an advanced diploma or their first undergraduate degree with employers who can give them work placements and ongoing employment once they finish their studies.

Eligible students receive financial assistance to help with living expenses, textbooks and equipment needed for their studies. In return, students are required to maintain a good academic record, undertake 12 weeks' work experience each year and stay in contact with the organisation that provides their cadetship.

Interested students and employers can find out more about ICS by visiting www.deewr.gov.au/ics or calling 1802 102.
